Text: Fantastic delivery and content by Roger. I'm sure the graduates will remember his points for many years to come. I especially loved the Dartmouth-specific references - like the size of Mass Row dorm rooms! I imagine these were inserted by his agent (a '93?). He seemed to chuckle when he mentioned them as he likely was wondering exactly what they meant. Well done.

Text: This was a little too scripted and cheesy. Also, a lot of the tennis jokes were not funny to average people who are not pro tennis players or no that into tennis...More importantly, I feel like he should have given more attention to the graduates and less talk about himself and tennis. I'm sure he would try to play it off as using tennis as a metaphor for life lessons but that's just a cop out. In fact it came off as him using this time to glorify himself..

But this speech, the fact that he won 80% of games with 54% of points, is among the most interesting things I've heard in life. I will never forget it. Thank you, Tennis. Thank you, Federer.

Text: I always say to talented people in sports (talented, as in they proved themselves in some competition or in a team as doing something that stands out). Please respect your talent! With the explanation that they need to nurture their talent and work hard to really become someone that will be recognized within their sport. Whatever will be the outcome you know that you did your best and that you will carry with you all life. I didn't really respect my own talent. I found several reasons for not pushing through. Winning and knowing exactly what I needed to actually do to move to the next step I couldn't follow through. My biggest talent was grit, until it wasn't any more. I had a hard time accepting and figuring out how it was I came to a situation where I did not want it as much as before. How injuries and other stuff ended up taking my grit away instead of growing stronger. Still puzzled but I learnt over the passed 25 years that the environment didn't suit me. Individual sport but travelling with a team that caused rivalry within the team. I actually made more friends outside my own team over the years with whom I could share meaningful discussions and views of culture and life. (ok it wasn't all that deep but deep enough and much more rewarding than fighting within my own team and not having especially interesting conversations over days and months in training and competition all over the world). Not being given the space to cherish moments of culture and history while travelling the world doing sports, is really missed opportunities. Unfortunately the time after sports has been a roller coaster of me trying to be the best I can but also not respecting the time and strategy it takes to reach goals in civilian life. I had success if it's measured in well paid and otherwise rewarding job positions, but only to feel I did not really earn it and never really finding myself. Always having that lost sporting career at the back of my mind. Finally at 45 I can truly enjoy life, family, work and everything else that is presented to me in everyday life. Maybe what Federer misses is that not everyone will have back up from family, maybe even worse, only pressure. To manage pressure from family and juggling an idea of making career choices that are not really accepted by family can be draining. To the point that you become half of what you really are and actually can achieve. So be prepared to walk that walk of not fulfilling what is expected from you but the walk that leads you to the experiences you will bring along for the rest of your life. Lost experiences is often something you will not be able to take back later in life. Be sure act on your curiosity. It doesn't cost you anything more than time and perhaps some Text: My best friend from my childhood, Yayo, passed away 2 days ago at the young age of 61. He was an athlete. Judo. Karate. Boxing. Swimming. And Tennis. I was only drawn to running long distance and boxing. I'm right handed. Yayo was left handed. So after getting punched plenty on the face with his right jab, he suggested I switch to a left hand stance. I did. Took a while to get used to it but I did it. It worked great. It became second nature. When we were about 12 Yayo invited me to play tennis with him. Never held a tennis racket before. He was very patient with me and was I think more eager than I to teach me how play tennis so I could also enjoy something he enjoyed a lot. Regretfully, my family had to move to another city and would only see him on holidays. We remained best of friends until his passing. Even though I did not continue with tennis, I loved watching a great match. I still do. When Federer came into the scene I immediately was drawn to him. The way he played was absolutely marvelous. But what drew me more to him was his demeanor. Even if some people who know him personally would argue that it is all a farse, an act, I want to believe that it is not so. The guy acts so humbly in defeat but most importantly in victory. That's how my best friend Yayo was. Everytime I sit in front of the tv and watch a tennis match I think about Yayo. Every time I hear Federer speak I'm reminded of Yayo's humility and generosity. Rest in peace my dear friend.

Text: In tennis, perfection is impossible... In the 1,526 singles matches I played in my career, I won almost 80% of those matches... Now, I have a question for all of you... what percentage of the POINTS do you think I won in those matches?

Only 54%.

In other words, even top-ranked tennis players win barely more than half of the points they play.

When you lose every second point, on average, you learn not to dwell on every shot.

You teach yourself to think: OK, I double-faulted. It's only a point.

OK, I came to the net and I got passed again. It's only a point.

Even a great shot, an overhead backhand smash that ends up on ESPN's Top Ten Plays: that, too, is just a point.

Here's why I am telling you this.

When you're playing a point, it is the most important thing in the world.

But when it's behind you, it's behind you... This mindset is really crucial, because it frees you to fully commit to the next point... and the next one after that... with intensity, clarity and focus.

The truth is, whatever game you play in life... sometimes you're going to lose. A point, a match, a season, a job... it's a roller coaster, with many ups and downs.

And it's natural, when you're down, to doubt yourself. To feel sorry for yourself.

And by the way, your opponents have self-doubt, too. Don't ever forget that.

But negative energy is wasted energy.

And I also have never seen anyone become emotional delivering a commencement address. This meant a lot to him, and his three simple points were all a distillation of wisdom. At least judging from what I have seen, I feel honored to be making comments with all of those who have done so already. I hope this class at Dartmouth follows Roger's 'tennis lessons', delivered 'out of his comfort zone'.

thoughtful, and he even memorized it. you can tell he put a lot of effort into this, the same way he does into his tennis, and shows how much he respects his audience. and his message was so good too. thank you roger. even though this wasn't my graduation, it felt like it was.

1. Effortless is a Myth: Discipline is a talent. Trusting yourself, having patience, embracing the process, loving the process, managing your life, and managing yourself are also talents. I believe in myself, but self-belief must be earned.
2. It's Only a Point: Even professional tennis players win barely more than 50% of their points.

You must learn not to dwell on every fault. Play every point as if it's the most important, but once it's over, let it go. The sign of a champion is not just winning repeatedly but knowing how to handle setbacks.
3. Life is Bigger than the Court: Tennis can show you the world, but it cannot be your whole world. Always strive to be a great person. Leaving a familiar world behind and finding new ones is incredibly exciting and deeply rewarding.

Final Lesson: Use an eastern grip and play a one-handed backhand (This one I am mastering).

Text: Summarized to AskTube

Roger Federer shares life lessons and tennis wisdom with the Dartmouth community, emphasizing the importance of hard work, self-belief, and perseverance. He reflects on his post-tennis life, balancing his career with family and philanthropy, and shares heartfelt moments with the audience.

Introduction to Dartmouth ■
00:00 Roger Federer thanks the audience and jokes about receiving an honorary doctorate degree.

Pong, Dartmouth, and Favorite Surfaces ■
01:55 Federer discusses his favorite surface, grass, and mentions the popular game of beer pong, which originated at Dartmouth.

Exploring Dartmouth and Family Moments ■
02:21 Federer shares his positive experience at Dartmouth, playing tennis with his kids, and exploring the campus, including the Baker Tower and the library.

03:16 He talks about his business partner and friend Tony Godsick, whose daughter Isabella is a member of the Class of 2024, and shares a heartfelt moment with the family.

Lessons from Tennis: Effort, Belief, and Perseverance ■
05:10 Federer reflects on his post-tennis life, saying that people often ask him what he does now, and shares that he's still figuring it out, just like the graduates.

06:02 Effortless is a myth. Federer emphasizes the importance of hard work and discipline in achieving success.

06:27 He shares an anecdote about an opponent questioning his mental discipline, which motivated him to work harder and develop his skills.

Federer highlights the importance of self-belief and earning it through hard work, citing his own experiences on the tennis court.

08:09 He explains how he learned to play to his opponents's strengths and developed a more well-rounded game.

Grit, Talent, and Perseverance ■

Federer discusses the importance of grit and discipline, emphasizing that talent is not just about natural ability, but also about dedication and perseverance.

Life Beyond the Court: Balance and Giving Back ■
15:36 Life is bigger than tennis. A tennis court is a small space, only 2,106 square feet. Tennis may have a significant impact, but it's not the only thing that matters. The world is much bigger.

16:06

Federer emphasizes the importance of balancing tennis with travel, culture, friendships, and family.

16:32 I started a foundation to empower children through education. Early childhood education is crucial, and 75% of children in Sub-Saharan Africa don't have access to preschool.

The Power of Teamwork and Relationships ■
20:06

Tennis, like life, is a team sport. Your success depends on your team, coaches, teammates, and even rivals.

21:01

Family is a team. I'm lucky to have an incredible wife and four amazing children who support me every day.

Final Words of Wisdom for Graduates ■
21:26

Remember, your parents and families made sacrifices to get you here. Don't forget the friends you've made and the culture of this community.

21:57 You are not former anything. You are future record breakers, world travelers, volunteers, and leaders.

22:57 For those who play tennis, use an eastern grip, keep your knuckles apart, and remember footwork is important.

Text: Attacking your opponent's strength, to break them, and gain confidence. I can't believe how much Roger and I have in common, the mindset, the journey to getting to be better. I too had this mindset of attacking player's forehand (which for most, is their strength), versus attacking the backhand (which mostly is less consistent or powerful than the forehand), and it was taking what is a tougher road to finding greatness. Tougher I found because I'd lose many points, games, matches because I was on a journey to becoming a more confident player, and it would happen much later on, than a few months away. Celebrating the little victories along the way, the feeling of winning just 1 or 2 more points per game even if you lost the game, is rewarding. The same goes for winning a service game, when going at their stronger side (mostly the forehand), keeping the mindset that all the while you're competing with your opponent, but at the same time, you're challenging yourself to do just a bit better with each point. There's a lot of fail that happens along the way, and how you deal with it, and carrying forward is what defines your character on court, maybe even in life. IMHO, I feel that is how you build the confidence and mental toughness. Personally, as an athlete, that ran 5:15 splits in 5k and 10k races, threw 2 hitters with 19 Strike outs at 18 years old, went years without double faulting, ever., practicing strokes up against the wall for 2-3 hours per day as a college kid, serving 300 balls a day outside of tennis practice, so that I could feel confident enough to hit anywhere I wanted on the court (on my demand), only to be as relentless in life off of the court to get what I wanted, was my resolve. Let me tell you something: any of the strengths/tools you use in life, you can be rest assured, that positive mindset happened and grew in your sport(s), one point at time, game at time, match etc.. A saying I love, anything want to learn about how to deal with everyday living, you can learn on the tennis court, playing competitive tennis. I love this game so, so much. I gave it to my Son. I loved watching him play, grow as a person, and as a high-performing athlete in it. In my adult years, and as I found The Maestro, The King, The GOAT, I watched his matches and replays, and enjoyed it, still do to this day, here it is 23 years later. I still play, and I still channel RF when I need to dig deep and focus. My zone is peRfect when I know I am out there playing to be better than the shot before, the day before, match before. It's important to keep growing, in my personal opinion. Glass is half full, always. I love this game. I love who Roger Federer is. What a speech he gave, right? Oh, and, Congratulations to you 2024 Grads, and to Dr. Roger Federer, also Class of 2024. Bravissimo!

To retire on 9 Wimbledon, would have been the perfect ending, to his career, instead of being tortured, coming back, and receiving a bagel in the 2021 QF, against Hubi Hurcazk, I still can't understand, how he didn't find that one ace! Hopefully his 8 Wimbledon are safe though now, doesn't look like Djokovic will be playing this year!

His outstanding technique and versatility on the court make him unique, much like Muhammad Ali in boxing. Both legends have shown that true champions are defined by their values and commitment to others. Both legends have touched, inspired and earned respect far beyond their sport through their personalities and influence.

Text: Roger Federer is not only an exceptional tennis player, but also a symbol of elegance and grace in sport. His inimitable technique and fair sportsmanship have inspired generations and left a lasting mark on the sport of tennis. Although he no longer holds the most records, he is still considered by many to be the GOAT, as he has enriched the sport in a unique way through his style of play and his personality. Federer has managed to carry his numerous successes with humility and humanity, making him a role model both on and off the court. After his career ended, I stopped watching tennis, because somehow tennis wasn't the same without him. Roger Federer's legacy will live on not only through his impressive victories, but also through his values and character.

was gracious, passionate and self deprecating with the humor addressed at himself. And apparently, Wimbledon did come to Hanover, as during the graduation ceremony, it was raining. "Effortless is a myth." "Discipline, Patience, Trusting yourself, Loving the process, managing life and managing process are talents." and "Talent is not enough."

Text: Words from the Gospel of Mental strength

"When you are playing a point, it has to be the most important thing in the world, and it is. But when it's behind you, it's behind you". This mindset is really crucial, because it fully commits you for the next point, and the next point after that, with intensity, clarity, and focus. Truth is, whatever game you play in life, sometimes you are going to lose a point, a match, a season, a job.

Negative energy, is wasted energy. You want to become master at overcoming hard moments, that is, to me, a sign of champion" ■

He is not the GOAT because oof his immaculate Tennis but his on court and off court behaviour, his respect for other players, ball boys, Umpires and his fans. I haven't seen him rant or behave rudely even if a point was stolen from him. His respect and affection for his coaches, trainers etc is awesome. Last but not the least his love for his family- Mika and 4 adorable kids is amazingly beautiful. All in all it is very rarely we see a true example of a Perfect Gentleman and we see that in Roger. I have heard such an inspiring speech for the first time from any famous personality. Now I can connect with whatever he advised to follow in this life journey.

This will be my favorite speech of lifetime.

Everything he said reflects his kind and humble nature.

I don't like to see Tennis anymore now as I feel it's charm has been replaced by greed of number positioning and power of extra power.

Tennis is real tennis ■■■only because of you .

A very humbling speech that teaches you how to succeed in life and the very essence of his speech simply resonates the motto of tennis spirit written at the entrance of the centre court of Wimbledon
"If you can meet Triumph and disasters and treat these 2 imposters just the same "
Roger has fulfilled that motto in life both in letter and spirit

The reason the applause is muted was weather related. We were all holding umbrellas and slapping our free hand against our legs but that just isn't as loud as two hands clapping. The protesters numbered about 50 and were barely audible if you were in the crowd (at least from where I was near the Jumbotron). Nobody paid them a lick of attention that I noticed. Last and most important, it truly was a memorable speech, and like Doctor Roger, I will never forget that I was there "On the Green". And if I ever do see him on the street, I will definitely thank him and congratulate him. Awesome experience for this 62 year old!

Text: I have said it many times, and I'll say it again, this man is not the Greatest Tennis Player Of All Time, although he is one of the top three greatest of all time, but he is without ANY doubt the most LOVED tennis player and in my opinion the most LOVED athlete of all time. There is a reason for that, and the reason is obvious when you watch this 26 minute speech. Roger Federer is the most genuine and loving sports star that anyone will ever meet or watch. His love for people including his family, friends, fans, and even these kids that he doesn't know at all shines as brightly as a star when you look in his eyes and see his expressions on his face. He is truly remarkable not only as a tennis player, but as a man as well. Thank you Roger for the 24 years (1998-2022) of tennis euphoria you gave to your fans, but thank you ■even more for being the man, the dad, the husband, the son, the brother, the friend, the role model, and the inspiration to more people than you could ever imagine. There are two tennis players (Novak Djokovic and Rafael Nadal) who have finally after so many years of trying eclipsed your records, but no amount of trying by them or any other player that has ever played or will ever play will be enough to eclipse you as a man, and what you have meant to the sport of tennis. Thank you, Roger. We love you and we miss you dearly ■

Sincerely,
Shane Gregg

When the match was over, Roger went to Isner's side, tried to cheer him up (and possibly thanked for keeping up with all the way to the end) That's why I love these people. I love tennis when Rafa was asked to join Roger for one last match he accepted it without hesitation although he was on his way to be a father in two weeks. Their hand-holding and crying together is arguably the strongest public message given by tennis players. Numbers are bound to fade away but your legacy is a different story. Margaret Court has twice the number of GS won by BJK but now people are petitioning to remove her name from AO grounds.
